Community Forests: A case for small scale forestry

A community forest can be described as any forestry operation managed by a local government, a partnership, First Nation or community-held corporation, society or cooperative for the benefit of the entire community.

Community forestry involves the four pillars of sustainable development: social, ecological, cultural and economic sustainability. At its core, community forestry is about local control over and enjoyment of the benefits offered by local forest resources.

The membership of the BCCFA represents over 100 Indigenous and rural communities.
